Title: NSA 39th Annual Conference

Date: June 29- July 2, 2022

Description: Stuttering is a communication disorder characterized by affective, behavioral, and cognitive components which are experienced differently across people who stutter. Because of the highly individualized nature of stuttering, it is key for speech-language pathologists to consider each client's unique experience with stuttering when developing and implementing therapy plans. The purpose of this series of workshops is to explore the core components of stuttering through case vignettes. The vignettes, presented by adolescents and adults who stutter about their own lived experiences with stuttering, will expose participants to variations in stuttering behaviors and severity, conceptualizations of stuttering acceptance and examples of self-disclosure, as well as attitudes toward stuttering and speech in general as they relate to the individuals' experiences.

Participants will be able to:

- Describe evidence-based practices for the treatment of stuttering across the lifespan
- List examples of progress in stuttering self-help, support, and advocacy from around the world
- Associate the difference between stuttering acceptance and stuttering pride.
